Monthly Commentary

Greater China markets delivered mixed returns in October. Taiwan was down 4.12%, Hong Kong was up 2.73% and the MSCI China Index was up 6.44%. The GCA Greater China Fund was up 4.95% for the month. The fund volatility is 7.60% vs 29.10% for the index. The fund's Sharpe ratio since inception is 0.85 and the fund's alpha is 0.06. Stocks that performed well for the month included on the long side Huaneng Power and on the short side Aluminum Corp. of China.

The economic news from China has shown a continuing rebound, with capital investment and consumer spending compensating for weakness in exports. The aggressive fiscal spending supported by bank loan growth has boosted the economy in the second and third quarters. The longer-term risk is that new asset bubbles are being formed (real estate for example) and the quality of new loan formation is poor. Hong Kong has benefited from rebound in China, and the low interest rate environment (based on the currency board system Linked to the United States dollar) has boosted real estate prices to all-time highs in many areas in the city-state. We have continued to maintain low net market exposure in the fund based on our concern that the current economic recovery is not sustainable in the longer-term and therefore there are considerable risks to being more aggressively invested. We have focused on adding value with relative value pair trades and using options to build positions in stocks we like with a goal of generating income for the fund.
